Rafter, Syracuse Crack Athlete, In Training the Year Round

Syracuse N. Y., March 5.—With the approaching close of the Syracuse University basket-ball season and the opening of the baseball practice season there has come to the attention of the followers of Syracuse University athletics an unusual condition with regard to one athlete, William J. Rafter, of Troy.

He has been athletically fit since the opening of the college year last September and will continue in training until the close of the baseball season in June, barring accidents. In spite of his unusual

He was one of the first men to report for football practice last fall. He played during the entire season in the back-field and went to the Pacific Coast with the eleven, returning to Syracuse about year.

The performances of this man are co

sidered the more remarkable because of his size. He weighs less than 145 pounds and is only five feet, six inches tall. Raf-ter is a junior and if he continues in athletics probably will make a record of block letters before his graduation. There is a parallel in the case of R. D. Seymour, who graduated last June. There is a marked tendency to tilt it backward slightly this year, which tends to cut down the wind resistance of the car and at the GRANT SIXsame time lends a racy appearance to the vehicle. It is a built-in part of the car now and is not stuck on as an after-thought. The result is that it conforms to the lines of the car and really enhances the beauty of the design instead of being merely a mass of glass work. Tops, of course, are better than ever before. Some of these switches are highly ingenious and—expensive. They incor-porate besides the lock feature, a wiring system which reverses the direction of the current flow every time the switch METZis turned on. This saves the points in the breaker mechanism of the ignition system. By means of the lock, the car cannot be operated until the key is inserted and this provides a guard against the car's being stolen. If not altogether thief-proof, it is still quite effective.
